Acknowledgements	9
List of Figures	11
List of Tables	13
List of Abbreviations	15
Introduction	17
Chapter 1
Psycholinguistic perspectives	21
1.1. The brain areas and functions	24
1.2. Reflection of the brain structure in language	26
1.3. The location of prosody in the brain	28
1.4. Psycholinguistic research techniques	30
1.4.1. Controlled experiment	30
1.4.2. Speed accuracy trade-off (SAT)	31
1.4.3. Semantic priming	32
1.4.4. Gating technique	33
1.4.5. Eye tracking	34
1.4.6. Self-paced reading	35
1.4.7. Rapid serial visual presentation (RSVP)	35
1.4.8. Picture naming	35
1.4.9. Neurophysiological methods	36
1.4.9.1. Functional magnetic resonance imaging techniques (fMRI)	37
1.4.9.2. Event-related brain potential (ERP)	38
1.4.9.3. Magneto-encephalography (MEG)	39
Chapter 2
The processing of compound words	41
2.1. Compound words	44
2.1.1. Promiscuity of N-N compounds in English	44

2.1.2. Semantic transparency and compound processing	45
2.1.3. What is semantic transparency?	46
2.1.4. Semantic transparency and prosody	49
2.1.5. The role of constituents in compound processing	49
2.1.5.1. The conjunctive activation approach (CAA)	50
2.1.5.2. The meaning computation approach (MCA)	51
2.1.5.3. Manipulating constituents' transparencies	52
2.1.5.4. Competition of constituents' semantics	54
2.2. Internal hierarchy and compound processing	57
2.2.1. Headedness	57
2.2.1.1. Morphological decomposition of multimorphemic words	58
2.2.1.2. The models of complex words decomposition	59
2.2.1.3. Representational system of compounds	60
2.2.2. Decomposition of compound words	60
2.2.2.1. The role of components in the decomposition of compounds	61
2.2.2.2. Initial and final position of the head	63
2.2.2.3. Right-headedness rule	65
Chapter 3
Experimental verification	69
3.1. Previous experiments on promiscuous compounds	72
3.2. Present experiments on promiscuous compounds	77
3.2.1. Methodology for our study	78
3.2.2. Experimental material	78
3.2.3. Design of the study	84
3.2.3.1. Experiment 1: production	85
3.2.3.1.1. Materials, participants and methods	85
3.2.3.1.2. Results	86
3.2.3.1.3. Statistical analysis	91
3.2.3.2. Experiment 2: perception	93
3.2.3.2.1. Materials, participants and methods	93
3.2.3.2.2. Results	94
3.2.3.2.3. Statistical analysis	98
3.2.3.3. Comparison of the results	101
3.3. General discussion and research questions	104
Conclusion	111
